

To Whom This May Concern,

I don't think the government or congress should try to control what radio or satellite we listen to. It's ridiculous! Next they'll be telling people they can't listen to the radio during business hours because it's not politically correct. I understand that radio stations may be losing listeners (and money - the real issue), but the question they need to ask is "why?". Is it because they're not playing what their audience wants to hear or because the content of their shows is sloppy and not realistic with lives of the listeners?

How would you like to listen to the radio day in and day out and every single time some song that was on when you first turned on the radio, was on again? Like Lil John or Jessica Simpson and her poor whipped husband wailing over the microphone? That is enough for me to commit suicide personally. I considered myself to be an avid Jazz fan, but where I lived there were no good stations. The good artists don't even get played anymore. They have folks like JaRule, Ashanti (help her Lord) and Britney Spears playing 24/7. That may be fine for some but not me. I like having the choice of hearing talented singers, comedy shows and news radio when I want. Hell I'm paying for it - might as well.

You win some, you lose some, but such is life. What are you gonna do? I just recently moved to VA and I couldn't tell you what radio stations are here. I never listen to it. I have my satellite! And wouldn't trade it for the world.

Hey, don't be mad at listeners for wanting variety, I only wish picking a husband was this easy!

Sincerely,
M. Yvonne Phillips
